THE SERENE SAVOY

In a quaint, grey town,
In the midst of Southern Hills
and Eucalyptus trees
Lies a small piece of land
Nestled in tranquility.

Among the ponies and rabbits that inhabit the estate,
Lie the Elizabethan and Victorian inspired cottages
The landscapes overlap in the distance
Where mirth and laughter mingle
Like the Sun rays and Rain drops.
Serenity prevails.

But this land has travelled through phases of time
From the corridors of European education
To the woods from the Tiger of Mysore
Royalty has graced this land-
King Edward VII to Martanda Bhairava
Thondaman - Raja of Pudukottai.
This hotel has seen the evolution from Sylk's to Savoy.

But there is something in this terra firma.
Something that unboxes the box.
That un-defines the defined.
Suddenly, it's not just Taj.
It's the SeleQtion's glory in uniqueness.

and then the evening welcomes
The humble chords of the piano
Complementing the notes of the flute
the aromas of Nilgiris fill the air.

The Jiva brings in a touch of comfort and comfort fills your being.
While the flames of the fire light up
The arena on a starry night.

Maybe that is what home away from your home means.
Warmth. Happiness. Peace.
Contentment. Belonging. Beautiful Memories.
And that's what Savoy gives you.
In the heart of the forest and hills.
A Home and a suitcase of memories that will stay for eternity.
but most importantly, the feeling
That wonderful feeling of being connected to the legacy.
Connected to the passage of the past that influences the future and embodies itself in the present.

HONEY AND NILGIRIS

Honey hunting is an activity that has been associated with tribal groups and people from the hill in India and elsewhere. Folklore, superstition and legends surround this unique and often dangerous activity. Till today, remnants of the strict traditions, reverence and associated rituals are followed in many parts of the Nilgiris. Most of the communities which lived in Nilgiris from last few centuries remained involved in honey hunting they specialize in harvesting of the precious bitter honey of the Apis dorsata, the largest and most aggressive bee species known today. The honey of Apis dorsata is taken directly from the combs found on the steepest cliffs or in the tallest trees of the forest, is now commonly known as "liquid gold".

Wrapped in swarms of thousands of bees, the Nilgiri honey hunters work without any protection. They hunt barefoot and entrust their lives only to a strong rope and long purification rituals; for weeks before harvest time begins in the forest, they stop using soap, perform daily prayers and follow a strict vegetarian diet.

Honey from the Nilgiris is more than just a sweetener, as it has several medicinal properties with its cleansing, antioxidant, and antiseptic characteristics. Produced by native species of bees in the depths of the forests, this honey is unaffected by pollution and other chemical influences.

Living in and around the scattered remnants of forests at elevations of around 1000 meters, this activity takes place in honey season from mid-April to mid-July depending upon the rains and flowering patterns. They normally go for collection in groups of 5 to 8 persons.

Honey is collected from the honey combs of the commonly called Indian Rock Bee. It makes its nests in cliffs or high trees. If honey is collected from the cliff a rope ladder of forest vines is made and tied to a tree or a rock above a cliff.

Hundreds of such honey cliffs are normally at a heights of 250 to 400 feet. The main honey hunter ascends the ladder to harvest the honey. The honey thus collected is either sold in the local market or shared among the group. This unique and traditional activity occupies a crucial component in the social complex of the tribals.
